“With the current turbulence in global trade and tariffs, companies are seriously evaluating reshoring manufacturing. This process includes finding an attractive and suitable location for factories.”

Rosemary Coates, Executive Director

“We are delighted that we have now published 25 profiles to assist companies in evaluating locations for their next manufacturing site,” said Rosemary Coates, Executive Director of the Reshoring Institute. “These profiles provide important information to be considered for factory locations,” she said.

“The profiles are carefully designed to be compared side-by-side. We know of no other side-by-side comparisons like this, to aid companies determined to bring manufacturing back to America or to expand their operations here. We are honored to host this important information for the States,” Ms. Coates said.

Tax incentives, grants, loans, and other important state economic metrics are included to aid reshoring companies in these complex location decisions. The profiles are completely free and available for download here: <https://reshoringinstitute.org/reshoring-knowledge-library/state-profiles>

“Several more State Economic Profiles are in-process,” said Alex Levy, Director at the Reshoring Institute. “We know this is a major undertaking for the State Economic Development Organizations, and we really appreciate their efforts in assisting companies by providing this very useful information.”

To date, the Reshoring Institute has published the following State Economic Profiles:

- Alabama
- Alaska
- Arkansas
- California
- Colorado

- Connecticut
- Iowa
