This form of relief not only protects the Foreign National from forced Deportation/Removal, it also provides for eligibility to pursue/obtain Lawful Permanent Residence through this process"

Magdalena Cuprys, Immigration Lawyer

Cancellation of Removal for a Non-LPR (Non-Lawful Permanent Resident) is a Discretionary Immigration Defense or form of Relief from Removal – thereby sparing the Respondent the consequences of Forced Removal/Deportation from the United States. This form of relief is only available before a US Immigration Court after an Individual has been placed into Removal Proceedings after the Issuance of an NTA (Notice to Appear).

This form of relief not only protects the Foreign National from forced Deportation/Removal, it also provides for eligibility to pursue/obtain Lawful Permanent Residence through this process (if found eligible by the Immigration #### Court).

In order to qualify for Cancellation of Removal and obtain Lawful Permanent Residence before a U.S. Immigration Court, one must demonstrate that the individual's United States Citizen and LPR (Legal Permanent Resident) family members must prove before an Immigration Judge that "Extreme Hardships" shall be endured by them as a result of the impending forced separation. (This "Extreme Hardship Standard" and examples of critical evidence shall be discussed in depth in a subsequent Issue of this Series).

Further, the Applicant/Foreign National must also prove the following:

1. Continuous Physical Presence:
You have been living continuously in the United States for at least 10 years;
the 10-year continuous presence must be satisfied PRIOR to the date of applying for Cancellation of Removal.
Please note that the date of Issuance of the NTA must be carefully examined, as such date officially ends one's continuous physical presence date for Cancellation of Removal calculation purposes.

2. Extreme Hardships:

Your Removal from the USA would cause "exceptional and extremely unusual hardships" to your USC or LPR Qualifying Relatives. For example, evidence of a minor child's medical condition, severity of illness, lack of available and suitable medical care in Applicant's home country, etc. are strong examples of extreme hardships.

3. Good Moral Character:

You must demonstrate that you are a good person and possess good moral fiber. Gathering evidence to prove this is critical, and should not be undertaken nor submitted without assistance of Counsel.

4. No Major Criminal Violations: Criminal violations in many cases can automatically disqualify the Applicant from eligibility to apply for Cancellation of Removal. Any Violations whatsoever, including all arrests, etc. must be carefully reviewed by Counsel.

5. Discretionary Relief:

This form of relief is Discretionary, which means it is NOT a right; it is a privilege. The Immigration Judge shall make an individual case determination of whether or not to grant or approve any such relief. One must prove to the Court that one deserves this relief from removal.

Cancellation of Removal for LPR: There also exists another remedy before the US Immigration Court – known as Cancellation of Removal for LPR (Lawful Permanent Resident). This should NOT be confused with the Cancellation of Removal standard discussed above which is exclusive to NON-Green Card Holders. This remedy is only available to those Foreign Nationals who already have LPR Status (Green Cards). This form of relief from removal shall also be discussed in depth in another forthcoming issue of the Cuprys Law Instruction series.
