This year's theme, "Mind, Body and Spirit: Healing through Art" resonated throughout the network, allowing all participants the opportunity to not only share their creative talents, but also to engage in intergenerational programming with the young minds and future leaders in the community. This annual campaign continues in an effort to promote creative thinking and enrichment through artistic endeavors.

Flexing the creative muscles, along with gaining physical and mental strength, is an important pillar of the CareRite network, understanding that relaxation techniques and modes of expression are proven in helping to empower residents. Within the Art for Life campaign, the use of intergenerational programming assists in bridging the gap between age and youth, building and strengthening the connection of growing and healing together through communication and expression.
