About the Author:

Avelino became interested in writing at an early age. He has published ten short stories in various magazines, some under the name of AD Conrad. He has written three novels. The Wizard Who Stole Manhattan is the first serious comic fantasy he has published. Please enjoy.

"De Castro has crafted a film comedy in prose form and makes suitably merry with the culture clash between displaced Native Americans and modern New Yorkers (the former often showing up the absurdities of the latter). The lighthearted adventure froths along...—well-scripted... A diverting comedy familiar in style though unusual in content." - Kirkus Reviews

About The Author

Avelino wrote his first poem at ten and his father fumed, and screamed with accusations that he had plagiarized it. It must have been a pretty good poem. He was born in New Bedford, MA, at St. Lukes hospital. He attended Acushnet Elementary school then Ford Junior High School in Acushnet, MA. He attended Old Colony Technical Vocational High School in Rochester MA for a time and graduated from New Bedford High School in MA.
