

Award Winning Gen-Z Documentary Filmmaker & Social Entrepreneur is Shifting the Bad News Narrative

Kasha Sequoia Slavner launches her new TED-style talk:

"MISSION POSSIBLE - Shifting the Bad News Narrative for Social Good"™

TORONTO, ONTARIO, CANADA,
November 12, 2018 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- Since returning home from an epic journey around the world at 16, completing a remarkable film festival tour in 55 countries across the world, winning 24 awards on her documentary The Sunrise Storyteller, Kasha Sequoia Slavner is continuing her quest to motivate people to create change by releasing a TED-style talk on Monday November 12th across all social media platforms about shifting the bad news narrative.

To quote Kasha, "You have a responsibility to take what you're seeing in the news as a call to action. What becomes possible when you refuse to believe the negative spin in the stories you tell yourself and the story the media feeds you? If we're tired of being inundated with bad news we need to change our actions, so the narrative can shift too."

As a recognized global teen leader & changemaker since the age of 8, Kasha Slavner realized in her early teens that media distributed to her generation was becoming increasingly negative, leaving consumers feeling overwhelmed and filled with anxiety for the future.

After attending the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women as a youth delegate with the Canadian Voice of Women for Peace at the age of 14, Kasha was moved by the empowering stories of grassroots feminist organizations and their efforts to find positive and sustainable solutions to incredibly difficult problems faced either individually or in their communities. It was this that inspired her to create The Global Sunrise Project a media hub for social good, for the purpose of sharing positive media as a catalyst for taking action. Her documentary had its World Premiere at the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women in 2017.

In her talk "Mission Possible - Shifting the Bad News Narrative for Social Good", she shares her 13 years of experience in a 13 minute video to inspire and ignite the light of future changemakers.
