Coal, in particular, occurs in 53 of West Virginia's 55 counties, directly supporting an estimated 30,000 jobs in the state, including miners and mine contractors, coal preparation plant employees, and mine supply company workers.

"West Virginia leads the United States in coal production," reveals Stone, "producing approximately 150 million tons annually."

The capital procurement specialist also goes on to reveal that taxes attributed to West Virginia coal currently account for over 60 percent of business taxes paid in the state.

"The private investment secured on behalf of Phoenix Energy Resources," he adds, wrapping up, "represents an excellent result, both for the business itself, and for me personally and the whole team at Eurasian Capital."
