As noted in her official biography, working earlier as a model and actress, Veera is additionally now working on producing her first feature film, UNREPORTED; based on her book of the same title. A cultural elevator; Veera founded and has published the widely read magazine Malibu Chronicle for over half a decade, lending her voice and mentorship to the community.

With a second degree in Computer Science, Veera earlier managed an international, multi-million-dollar software company headquartered in Auburn Hills, Michigan. The highly educated business leader is also an international beauty. She represented India during the Mrs. Asia, USA Cultural Pageant, and occasionally still graces the pages of magazines. During years of experience in the corporate world, Veera has founded companies, managed start-ups, and succeeded in both corporate sales, mergers, and acquisitions.

Childhood

Born in Punjab, India, Veera Mahajan came to United States in 1982. Landing in the United States from India in 1982 as a young woman of nineteen with her family, her parents wanted the best life for her and her three brothers, which they duly received.

Proud of her background; to Veera, being an Indian woman means "To be a person of top integrity and good principles." She states that "Indians believe in gaining higher education, working hard to achieve one's goals, and are known for being wonderful, and entertaining hosts," all which happen to be some of the defining characteristics of this modern-day renaissance woman.

A mother of two sons; Kunal and Rahul, Veera enjoys reading, writing, running, hiking, dancing, and doing yoga in her spare time. As a philanthropist, the entrepreneur has run marathons, and even climbed a tower of stairs in order to raise funds for the sick and poor.

Opinion Leader with a Mission to Heal

Yet Veera's most notable achievement in helping others are her landmark accomplishments in becoming aware of and fighting to stop domestic violence and abuse, and to stop being a victim. As a vocal survivor of spousal abuse in her own right, Veera found the help and strength to finally recognize and leave her former situation. No longer a victim, Veera Mahajan is now a victor. Making it her life mission to help others escape domestic abuse that she too suffered, Veera's crowning achievements have been real-life coaching, mediation, and training others in the field; in the homes, schools, colleges, and churches of her community.

Through her critically acclaimed book "Unreported," Veera interviewed many who like her—suffered—yet overcame abuse. Through her unique, educational book, she encourages many from around the world who have been living in abusive situations, to better recognize the reality of their situation—which is often predicated on denial. Demonstrating they are not alone, Veera shows that with the right help through her efforts and the assistance of others, a life of happiness and freedom waits for them on the other side. Veera is pleased to be the light to others for that very hope, and to be the guide for them to follow her on that great new path that she has carved for herself—to victory.
