Fresh beer is what counts the most at the Hulmeville Inn

At the Hulmeville Inn, we have a tradition of counting the unique kegs we tap every year. The keg count total is located on our website under the tab "Keg Counter" along with the lists for the prior years.

It is a testament to the varied amount of beer we serve, while also documenting how fresh the beer is.

Beers are counted only one time no matter how many times we serve that beer in a given year.

Fresh beer is what counts the most at Hulmeville Inn. The keg counter numbers prove just that. We have been pouring cold fresh beer since 1997, after all.

While we think all craft beer is awesome, some of the standouts are worth noting. Tired Hands, Russian River, Maine Beer Co., Foreign Objects, Funk Brewing, Hill Farmstead, and Lawson's Finest Liquids are all sought after and in the rotation permanently.

Wondering what defines craft beer? Well, it can be complicated or simple depending on how you look at it. The main difference is that craft beer is produced by a craft brewery in smaller amounts than traditional beer.

Craft beer is made by small and independent brewers. The Brewers Association defines craft beer solely as, small, independent, and traditional.

Craft breweries spend countless hours on their beer's ingredients to ensure their beer doesn't cut corners and has a unique flavor. Major beer companies tend to focus more on mass production rather than taste and quality.

Another great thing about craft beer is that we are able to locally source. Some great local craft beers are Pizza Boy, 2SP, Yards Brewing which are also featured regularly. Being able to locally source beer is something really special and cool to experience flavors unique from your area.
