Medical marijuana and recreational marijuana are hot topics in today's workplaces; I look forward to helping employers better understand how to protect their company and maintain a safe workplace.”

Tom Fulmer

When asked about the program, Tom Fulmer stated, “Many people have heard of medical marijuana or recreational marijuana and attempts at the Federal level to make marijuana legal and there are debates on both sides about whether marijuana should be legal. No matter what your position or opinion though, business owner or managers, have decisions to make and those should be made sooner rather later. Otherwise, they may be exposing themselves to liability.” Some of the points that Tom will address include how marijuana laws may affect the company and its’ policies, recent court cases and their impact on the workplace, the types of drug testing you can and should be utilizing, and implications and potential pitfalls of keeping or dropping Marijuana from a workplace testing program.

As of November 2018, Recreational marijuana is legal in 10 states and medical marijuana is legal in 33 states. The laws vary greatly from state to state and court cases have added additional complexity to the mix. Combine that with the fact the Marijuana is illegal federally and that leaves many employers uncertain what to do.
