

Richard E. Nobles Discusses Large Loss Disasters

With more than 10 years of experience in the insurance industry, Richard Nobles discusses large loss disasters.

BOWLING GREEN, KENTUCKY, USA, December 24, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Currently the Director of Commercial Development with ProTouch Restoration, Richard E. Nobles has hands-on adjusting experience in adjusting complicated large losses. Richard E. Nobles offers a thorough understanding of construction components and specific projects having managed thousands of large loss situations.

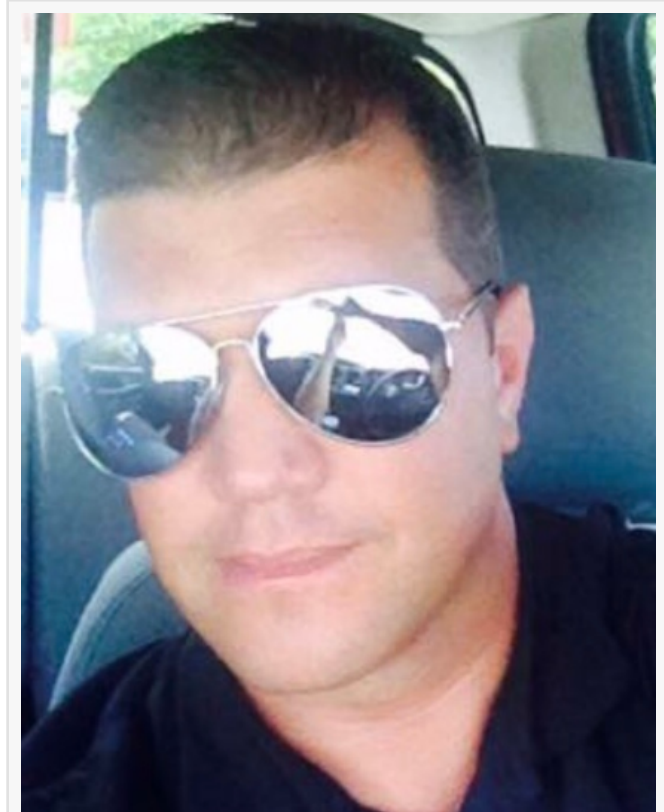

Large losses can be categorized in many different ways. By dollar volume, the size of the area affected, and can often be categorized by just how complex the loss was. This is because the size of a disaster often times results in a specific area being considered to be a large loss overall.

Richard E. Nobles understands that no matter the size of the loss when it directly affects a business or family, communities, and people suffer the most and he assures all of his clients that he will be there to walk them through the process with his experience and expertise every step of the way.

Single structured losses are typically defined as a loss of over 50,000 dollars to a number of floors including a single story, multi-story, or type of complex with the size of the facility and square footage all being taken into consideration to define it as a large loss.

Richard E. Nobles also has experience with weather disasters that often destroy multiple complexes and homes, affect communities, or even destroy entire parts of towns. Even though these types of natural disasters can be characterized as large losses, they are taken very seriously by Richard E. Nobles, and with his background, he has seen great success in helping business owners, families and communities recover through insurance. Weather disasters can take a long time to recover from, and require a hands-on approach to recovery in towns and communities. Before Richard E. Nobles can get to work, companies and organizations will work together to provide recovery efforts to make sure that people are safe and secure, before the insurance process begins. This will ensure that everyone will be protected before the real work of rebuilding begins.

No matter the size of the type of large loss your business or family has gone through, Richard E.
