

CompanionLink Releases Update for Google Batch Endpoints

Google Deprecates Batch API Endpoints in March 2019. CompanionLink's release updates customers to the new Endpoints.

PORTLAND, OR, US, December 27, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- CompanionLink Software has released an update to CompanionLink for Google to provide support for the new Batch Endpoints for the Google Calendar API. Google announced in March 2018 that they would be discontinuing support for the old values. Customers who synchronize Outlook to Google should be aware that an update is needed to maintain sync to Google Calendar.

"The Google Calendar API has periodically changed through the life of the product," says Wayland Bruns, CTO for CompanionLink. "In our PC world, we are happy to see customers who run our software without modification for a decade. This is a great advantage to customers who purchase a perpetual license that maximizes their return on investment. Google chooses to update their API periodically and PC based customers must update to meet the changes in the web-based Google API."

With this offer you can purchase CompanionLink 8 for Google, which you can install on three computers, get free telephone technical support and a built-in deduplication tool, for just $29.95."

CompanionLink for Google synchronizes Outlook Calendar, Contacts and Tasks to Google. The current release of CompanionLink 8 uses the new endpoints and was updated shortly after Google's announcement in 2018. In addition, CompanionLink has updated CompanionLink 7 with the new batch endpoint, which allows a fee update to who purchased CompanionLink products after January 1, 2014. CompanionLink advises these customers to install the update before March 2019 to maintain Google Sync API compatibility.

"We are extending our update pricing to those who use competing Outlook to Google sync products which may not be updated," says Bruns. "With this offer you can purchase a full license of CompanionLink 8 for Google, which you can install on three computers, get free telephone technical support and a built-in deduplication tool, for just $29.95.
