

Immigration Lawyer Magdalena Cuprys publishes research guide for "traditional" immigration and visa research

Magdalena Cuprys, Esq. provides an unconventional guide to places where to research visa and immigration matters, including simply going to nearest law library

MIAMI, FLORIDA, UNITED STATES, January 6, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Magdalena Cuprys, Florida-based immigration lawyer, has published a research overview for those researching visa and immigration matters. The complete overview is available on her Blog at <https://magdalenacuprysblog.blogspot.com/>

Nobody knows for sure, but it is said that in the United States, after Tax Law, Immigration Law is the most complicated area of law. I have not counted, but the laws, regulations and commentary allegedly cover more than 10,000 printed pages. Be that as it may, we can all agree on the fact and that visa and immigration matters are very complex. But let us start with research basics.

There are no second opinions about the fact that conducting legal research can be extremely difficult regardless of the sources that you might have access to. There are a number of different aspects that need to be taken into consideration when conducting legal research. This is because there are a lot of different directions that you can take with legal research, and it is absolutely imperative for you to take all factors and aspects into consideration when you're dealing with legal documents and cases since even the slightest discrepancy can amount to a lot.

Needless to say, legal research requires a lot more concentration and diligence than other types of research due to the different conclusions that are possible with minor tweaking. What's more, since there's a lot more material that you need to go through when it comes to legal research, you need to be absolutely certain that your sources are not only credible and authoritative, but also relevant to the problem at hand.

Another common problem that researchers and people interested in legal issues face is that of contradictory information available online.

Additionally, in most cases, credible information online comes with a literal price to pay. What this means is that most online platforms that contain credible legal information expect you to pay a fee to be granted access or authority to view the content.

Interested in learning more about how you can go about conducting legal research the right way? Read on to find out as we tell you all about the different steps that you should take to conduct legal research the traditional way without relying on online sources for best results.

Ask a Librarian

You may laugh, but librarians are experts in legal research and they know their library better than any visitor. Many legal libraries, such as the Library of Congress in Washington, DC, are open to the public. Thus, if you have an issue to which you simply must find the answer, simply try the closest law library and .... ask a librarian for help when you begin your research

Manual Research - Conducting immigration research the traditional way

Contrary to popular belief, the path you follow for legal research will be based on a number of different factors. What this means that there is no single path that's set in stone that absolutely must be followed in case you need to conduct legal research.

With that said, while there are certain common and extremely popular steps that are generally followed by anyone who wishes to conduct legal research, it's important to note that these steps may or may not be followed in a sequential fashion for each scenario. This essentially means that while certain scenarios may require you to follow the steps listed below in the exact order, you may choose to play around for other cases – and that will not affect the results of your research.

Before you start conducting legal research, it's important for you to know that you will be expected to revisit certain sources of information for increased clarity. What's more, you might even be expected to check certain sources of information a number of times due to exceptions. Even in the case of exceptions, you will have to double-check whether the conditions of the exception apply to your particular case, and if there is any way that the exception can be worked around for your particular scenario.

Here are some of the steps that you are advised to follow when conducting legal research without the use of the internet:

The number one reason why people are unable to conduct thorough research is the fact that they do not pay enough attention to the initial phase of the process. It goes without saying that identifying the problem and its scope is of key importance when you're interested in conducting legal research as doing so will essentially set the precedent and give you an idea of how thorough your research must be.

When you're trying to identify the problem and its scope, it's also important to ask questions that are highly specific and will give you a clear understanding of the jurisdiction, search terms, and time period that is applicable or relevant to the problem. By doing so, instead of being confused by all of the options that you have available, it will be possible for you to get a better sense of direction to start taking the most appropriate path for conducting your research.

Unlike primary sources, secondary law or sources of information are bound to help you understand how your specific scenario is also relevant for a much broader context. What's more, once you start browsing through secondary sources of information, it will be far easier for you to visit primary sources that are relevant to your particular scenario and can help you gain greater understanding for the scope in question.

By consulting secondary sources of information, it will also be possible for you to get references to citations and statutes that will help you gain the right information regarding your legal research.

Once you have done your fair share of research through secondary sources, it will be far easier for you to identify relevant statutes that will help you in gaining the information that you need for your legal research of a particular scope, question, or scenario. By identifying relevant statutes, you can get into greater detail and start browsing through to find other sections that may be relevant or could potentially add value to your legal research.

In addition to finding the right statutes for the legal research of your particular scenario, you can also browse through cases in digests and find ones that may contain relevant information to ensure that all aspects of research are covered.

Below this, a paragraph describes her as the principal of Serving Immigrants, a full-service immigration law firm. The main content area features a blog post titled "Immigration Attorney Magdalena Cuprys obtains bond for client accused of domestic violence but where facts are in dispute". To the right of the blog post is a search bar and a "PAGES" section with links to "Home" and "About Me". Below the blog post is a bio for Magdalena Ewa Cuprys, detailing her education (Juris Doctor from the University of Washington School of Law in 2002, Bachelor's degrees in Political Science and Latin American Studies from the University of Chicago in 1999), her membership in the Immigration Lawyers Association (ILA), and her fluency in Russian, Spanish, and Polish. A portrait of Magdalena Ewa Cuprys is shown to the right of her bio. Below the bio is a section titled "Blog of Immigration Attorney Magdalena Cuprys" and another section titled "Magdalena Ewa Cuprys, Esq., Immigration Attorney in Florida". This section includes a "Services" section with a description of the firm's offerings and a "Contact Information" section with two office addresses: Miami/Coral Gables Office (4011 W Flagler Street, Suite 406, Coral Gables, FL 33134) and Clewiston Office (518 E Sugarland Hwy, Clewiston, FL 33440). At the bottom of the page, there is a link to the attorney's profile at www.solomonlawguild.com.

Keeping track of all of the documents that you have already been through is extremely essential to ensure that you do not have to resort to the same cases and documents over and over again. It's also important to note that you must do so regardless of whether or not you have retrieved any relevant information from the source.

Now that you know of all of the steps that you need to follow to conduct research the traditional way, it will be easy for you to figure out how you want to proceed with looking for immigration information. Remember that the nearest law library may be the best starting point. And remember to ask a librarian before you start searching and reading, it will save you hours of time, notes Ms. Cuprys.
