

Fire repair only part of the restoration work

On top of any fire damage, you now have to deal with the water problems.

LOS ANGELES, CA, US, January 17, 2019
/EINPresswire.com/ -- Most people know a fire can cause plenty of damage and have some idea about fire repair. What they often don't think about is water damage that comes from putting out the fire.

"This is not the fault of the fire department. They have to put the fire out. The best way to do that is with water and it can take a LOT of water," said Karl Brook of KRB Flood & Fire Restoration. "Before the fire department leaves, they have to be sure all the hot spots are put out so the fire doesn't come back later. That means more water."

KRB is an expert in fire damage repair in Southern California. Because water damage often goes hand-in-hand with putting out a fire, they are also experts at water damage repair and restoration. The damage is not quite the same as the aftermath of a fire, but it can be similar in a lot of cases.

Mr. Brook explained a flood might put water into the house a few feet deep and it can stay there for hours or days. Fighting a fire puts water anywhere, including into an attic, but it runs out quickly. The moisture left behind is the problem.

"Water soaks into everything. Walls, carpets, floors and more may have to come out and be replaced," he said. "On top of that, you need to get this moisture out as soon as possible to avoid black mold from growing. Black mold can be an environmental nightmare on top of the fire and water damage."

In business for years, KRB has established a reputation for quality and customer service that few can match. Mr. Brook said the name of the business is fire and flood repair, the company's true product is the service it provides and the way customers are treated.

"We can help you deal with the insurance company, too. We know what insurances companies look for, what they want and what they expect," he said. "We really hope you never go through a fire or a flood, but if you do, we're going to be here for you to help you through this difficult time."
