

Sahara Group Urges Millennials to Embrace Innovation in quest for leadership

Sahara Group's Executive Director, Temitope Shonubi has advised millennials seeking leadership roles to be innovative and defy myths and misconceptions.

LAGOS, LAGOS, NIGERIA, March 5, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Sahara Group's Executive Director, Temitope Shonubi has advised millennials seeking leadership roles to embrace challenges and break new grounds through innovation, collaboration and an insatiable desire to defy myths and misconceptions.

Speaking to Law students on “The Future of the Workplace: Millennials in Leadership” at Lead City University, Ibadan, Shonubi said while it was imperative for businesses to give millennials more opportunities, “leadership roles usually gravitate towards capable, committed, irrepressible, creative and exceptional individuals”.

The onus is on millennials to ensure they are never satisfied with the norm. There has to be a new way to make things better; finding that way is the attribute that will set you apart.”

The event took place at the University's main auditorium with over 400 law students and faculty members in attendance. During the lecture, Temitope Shonubi emphasized that, “Given the ongoing demographic shift in the work place, the success of businesses in the future would depend on how much they are willing to invest in the millennials in their workforce. This reality guides our philosophy at Sahara Group as we continue to record amazing achievements that are inspired by the young bright minds in Sahara.”

A recent study by the Financial Times indicates that over the next few years, the younger generations will grow from 35 per cent to account for 75 per cent of the global workforce demography, while the older generations in the work place will shrink considerably from 65 per cent to 25 per cent by 2025. Millennials already make up a large portion of today's working population. “As their numbers grow and they gain more experience, millennials will take a larger role in company leadership, and specifically in organizational transformation efforts. The onus is on millennials to embark on continuous self-development with a mind-set that is never satisfied with the norm. There has to be a new way to make things better; finding that way is the attribute that will set you apart,” Shonubi stated.

He urged the students to be fearless, patient, avoid substance abuse and be willing to give back to the society to promote sustainable development across the globe.

Lead City University Vice Chancellor, Dr. Kabir Aderemi Adeyemo commended Sahara Group for leading the charge for youth empowerment and urged the students to remain resolute and committed to hardwork and innovation. One of the participants; Oyewole Oladimeji, a 300 level law student at the University said that he had learned that humility and patience are critical to bridging the generational gap and encouraging diversity in the future workplace. "I am delighted to have benefitted from the lecture and salute Sahara Group for its commitment to developing youths across the globe."
