Green tea is one of the fastest-growing segments of the global tea industry. It is prepared from the leaves from camellia Sinensis that have undergone minimal oxidation during processes. Generally, people take green tea due to its health benefits purpose. The concept of green tea was originated from China and later spread all over the world. Some of the popular

Japanese green teas are Sencha, gyokuro, kabusecha, matcha, tencha, genmaicha and hojicha. The global green tea market is witnessing an impressive growth over the last few years. This is attributed by the rising health conscious people both in developed and developing economies. Also, increasing disposable income of the consumer is anticipated to be the significant reason of the growth of green tea during the forecast period. Increasing cardiovascular diseases and obesity cases are anticipated to fuel the sales of green tea during the forecast period. Apart from that, presence of catechin in green tea hinder the growth, motility, and incursion of cancer cells which in turn escalates the death of such malignant cells. APAC is expected to be the major revenue contributor to the green tea capsules market throughout the forecast period. This region witnesses steady growth owing to the increasing awareness about the health benefits of green tea that is consequent in increased sales. Additionally, the growing number of supermarkets, hypermarkets, discount stores, and convenience stores, distributing green tea globally will drive the growth of the green tea market in this region.
