

The Clearwater Community Volunteers Center Helps Community Go Organic with Gardening Workshop

CLEARWATER, FL, USA, April 11, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- On April 6th the Clearwater Community Volunteers Center in downtown Clearwater held a workshop with gardening expert Jai McFall to teach people how to protect Clearwater's environment while growing organic foods with little to no chemicals. Ms. McFall has been in the organic gardening industry for over 50 years and uses her knowledge to deliver educational workshops to schools, non-profits, and garden clubs to improve overall food quality in her community. The free event also provided all the needed supplies at no cost to attendees.

Michael Soltero, Manager of the Clearwater Community Volunteers Center said, "Our environment is our home. We asked Ms. McFall to donate her time and knowledge for this workshop so that local families can have the information they need to reduce chemicals being introduced into our environment. What humanitarian L. Ron Hubbard wrote, 'Care of the planet begins in one's own front yard,' exemplifies that a healthy environment starts with us."

At the workshop Ms. McFall spoke on common foods that can carry high levels of toxins and then allowed guests to get their hands dirty potting their own plants.

Guests kept their planted seeds and have already seen the seeds sprout.

Ms. McFall has over 20 different workshops and educational seminars that give information on health and food related topics such as: how to restore proper vitamin and mineral content to your garden soil; and composting an all-natural fertilizer to grow healthy plants without the need for chemically imbued fertilizers.
