CANA Foundation's rewilding initiatives humanely manage and preserve America's wild horse populations; while simultaneously fostering land conservation, sustainability, climate mitigation, community empowerment and stewardship. Through these rewilding initiatives, large scale media projects and creating innovative rewilding policies, CANA advocates for rewilding as a non partisan solution to America's wild horse management and fiscal crisis.

CANA purchases horses at a standard Bureau of Land Management adoption prices, identifies habitats where the herds can live with dignity, free from the risk of slaughter; and transports them to native and private lands to live out their lives naturally as part of different social, spiritual, economic and workforce programs within the communities that welcome them home.

CANA's rewilding initiatives advocate for the spiritual importance of wild horses, while working to ensure they are protected and preserved as a cherished and integral component to the balance of the North American ecosystems. In doing so, we are conserving diminishing western territories and natural resources, contributing to the protection of biodiversity and natural ecosystems, preserving Native culture and creating empowered and sustainable communities for generations to come.
