

How #CrisisTalk is Transforming Dialogue in Behavioral Health

ALEXANDRIA, VA, USA, May 7, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- May 7, 2019 – The National Association of State Mental Health Program Directors (NASMHPD) and its Crisis Now partners have launched the #CrisisTalk website, sparking much-needed dialogue on behavioral health crises. The new publication provides a platform for diverse experts and people with Lived Experience to exchange thoughts, knowledge, and innovations. Each article shares a person’s perspective, whether that’s an emergency department doctor who tells her story, revealing the challenges emergency physicians experience when faced with a patient in crisis, or a student who was having suicidal ideation and his university chose legal self-protection over doing what was best for him.

The objective says Brian Hepburn, Executive Director of NASMHPD, the lead organization for Crisis Now, is to facilitate conversations about mental health crises, including missed opportunities, gaps, tools, and best practices. “#CrisisTalk is sharing the diverse stories of people affected by behavioral health crises, including those who have experienced one, loved ones, and stakeholders who need to be part of the conversation, swinging the pendulum worldwide toward awareness and change.”

#CrisisTalk interviews include the lens of mental health experts and first responders. They point out common misconceptions and challenges in their fields and the communities they serve. This includes why some don’t develop a full continuum of crisis care services. Retired police officer, Nick Margiotta, says smaller towns don’t believe they have the infrastructure to do so. “They can start small with a two-person unit that does mobile crisis part-time. It’s a jumping off point that’s low-cost and low-risk.” These discussions transcend geography and illustrate ways to make positive changes in the crisis space, including, says Melinda Moore, Ph.D., co-lead of the Action Alliance for Suicide Prevention Faith Communities Task Force, simply having a conversation with a person in crisis. “A non-judgmental, empathic approach, along with a willingness to listen and sit with someone can go a long way.”

David Covington, CEO & President of RI International, believes the time is right for #CrisisTalk. “Our country is finally contemplating a 911 for the brain and grappling with the significant challenge of psychiatric boarding in hospital emergency departments. Change is coming.”

#CrisisTalk is part of CrisisNow.com, a roadmap to safe, effective crisis care that diverts people in distress from the emergency department and jail by developing a continuum of crisis care services that match people’s clinical needs to care.
