

24/7 Water Damage Charlotte Urges Residents to Inspect for Mold During Spring Cleaning this Season

The experts from 24/7 Water Damage Charlotte want to help local homeowners and business operators identify and remove mold for health and safety this season.

CHARLOTTE, NC, USA, May 13, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- As temperatures start to rise, and local community members in the Charlotte area begin to do their Spring cleaning tasks, the professional water, fire, and mold technicians from 24/7 Water Damage Charlotte encourage everyone to check for mold growth or areas that could potentially become breeding grounds for the familiar and unwanted predicament.

With over 25 years of experience in the mold remediation industry, these highly-trained contractors have seen all kinds of mold problems including black mold in various areas of homes and commercial building structures. One fact that can't be argued when it comes to mold is that if the issue is left untreated, it's only going to get worse.

After all of the flooding and hurricanes from last year, we cleaned up enough houses to know how much mold is out there by now. If you didn't have any water damage cleanup you may want to get tested.”

All that mold needs in order to start growing is a hard surface, oxygen, and moisture. These factors make places like attics and basements familiar places for the problem to start, but in reality, it can happen just about anywhere and at a lightning fast pace. During the Springtime while doing all the other necessary clean up, maintenance, and repairs, the family owned and operated company wants to make sure that every other family in the area is adequately protected from the harmful effects that come with the untreated mold.

The qualified experts have tips and tricks that residents can follow when it comes to preventing mold growth including keeping gutters cleaned out, fixing plumbing leaks, and cleaning up drips or spills right away as soon as they happen. With mold growing in the basements, attics, and other parts of buildings that don't get regular attention or visitors, sometimes it's too late to prevent decay because, by the time the area is inspected, the fungus is already present and spreading.

The dangers of leaving mold to take over a home or office space are plentiful. To start with, even though it looks seemingly harmless, it can cause damages to the structure of the building. That's why homes are built with the ground sloping down and away from the foundation; to keep water from pooling and causing costly repairs. Secondly, mold is disturbing for those with a delicate respiration system, including the elderly and very young children. While it might be tempting for some to try and clean up mold themselves if it is found, it's always going to be recommended that a job like this be left up to the professionals.

There is a specific process, safe and effective cleaning solutions, and equipment that is all necessary to be 100% confident that the mold that was discovered is completely cleared away. At 24/7 Water Damage Charlotte, some of the hardworking technicians specialize in getting this kind of work completed the first time correctly. If even the slightest spore gets left behind, the whole problem could multiply and return in a matter of 24 hours or less. Additionally, if there are any existing breathing problems such as asthma in the person doing the project, cleaning up mold could be life-threatening.

Unfortunately, for many homeowners that 24/7 Water Damage Charlotte has worked with, the mold problem isn't discovered until after there are already serious issues occurring. That's why they added the service of mold remediation on top of the clean up that they already do. Instead of having to hire two separate companies, they want their clients to feel comfortable and inconvenienced when working with one contractor for the entire project.

As industry leaders in mold identification, cleanup, and remediation, these reliable experts suggest that anyone suspecting mold call in a professional right away. They can do the proper testing of the alleged fungus to determine precisely what they are dealing with. By doing that, they can come up with the best method for eliminating it once and for all. There aren't any two mold cleanup jobs that they do that are the same, so that's why they always suggest that a proper test is done before the cleaning starts.

After the mold has been identified, the area should be adequately contained to keep it from spreading any further. These knowledgeable and prepared contractors have the tools and ability to take care of that step right on the spot, so there is no need to make a special trip to the hardware store for supplies. Then, the mold gets safely and properly removed so that there is no way that it will start growing again. If it does, they will come back and do a repeat service for no additional charge, but that's not something that happens regularly. Finally, for those that have damages to drywall, carpet, foundations, or other parts of the home or commercial building structure, the mold remediation process can start. It's the only way to get the building back to its original condition.

For those people living in the Charlotte, NC area that need assistance or guidance with checking for mold growth, they have a team ready to be dispatched to residential and commercial locations around the clock. In the event there was a fire at a structure, these experts can come in and clean up and repair damages from that as well as provide services for fire remediation, water damage cleanup in Charlotte, and much more.
