The SHE Brand Acquires Brandyay

The Ultimate Online Design & Sales Platform for the Brand of You

Palmdale, CA: Aiming to compete with all major brands, The SHE Brand makes moves to increase its overall company value by acquiring Brandyay; an online design platform for use by artists, fashion designers, independent designers, influencers, store owners or anyone with the desire to design and sell personally branded apparel. Prior to acquisition, Brandyay was co-founded by Jerrod Washington; former NFL athlete who played for the New England Patriots, and brother-in-law to Kobe Bryant in collaboration with "tech guru" Chris Brian, co-founder to both Brandyay and the HAULS brands. The acquisition of Brandyay makes clear SHE ventures to increase the value of their company, and to do so their plan includes establishing a solid foundation in the dot com sphere.

From production to purchase, Brandyay users can use the online 3D designer to create their own clothing line. Brandyay can be used to design without limitations to print one-offs, or as many on-demand items as desired. Users can sell their designed products on Instagram or any other online marketplace. Their customers can order directly via Instagram posts, Facebook Pages or other sites and pages managed by users when powered by Brandyay. <https://brandyay.com/>

"We want the world to know our brand", says CEO, Lupe Rose. "We want the world to know we are a company to contend with, and to do so we must share our investments in technology. We want it said we launched branches within our organization that challenged other prominent brands. Bringing Brandyay into our portfolio of companies says that we are committed to continuing to establish the company as an internationally recognized brand with an unformidable presence. As always, we remain committed to creating jobs, generating income and wealth were there was none, and Brandyay allows us to continue to do that."

SHE is carving out its stake of online revenue with the purchase of Brandyay. It's currently taking steps to further improve the site's technology by placing the Brandyay site under construction to implement changes that are expected to surpass the online shopping experience.
