Some sample tips include:

* Have an online book tour and plan a cost-effective online campaign.

- * Write a press release and distribute to online outlets.
- * Create monthly newsletters and ask fans to sign up for them.
- * Consider if pay-per-click advertising on Google, etc. might be appropriate for your book.
- * Submit your website to any related group, company, or organization's website that has a website directory.
- * Start link building by creating valuable resources and building relationships with site owners that would find those resources to be worth sharing.
- * Research your competitors to find out what they're doing to be successful that you're not.
- * Create a blog on your website and update it regularly with new, interesting content.

* Comment on anything that will interest visitors, and cover diverse topics including developments in the publishing industry.

* Respond to comments and questions on your blog in a timely manner; and welcome and type of ideas offered in comments.

* Once you've been blogging for a while, search your archives for your best blog posts and sell them as a collection (preferably as a low-cost eBook).

* Add keywords to your blog posts and follow a DIY SEO plan.

* Guest blog on other popular blogs. This can be particularly effective for novel promotion when you guest blog on special interest genre blogs.

* Allow guest bloggers on your blog.
