Typically, rain boot is made of rubber and/or neoprene; they slip on, feel a little loose, and are typically a poor choice for walking long distances. Since rain boots lack laces, they often have a less-than-perfect fit, and it can be a struggle to find one that feels the best. Some models have insulating liners; this makes them ideal for winter conditions, but is a detriment in summertime. The opposite is true for those that lack insulation; they are pleasant to use in the summer but not warm enough for the winter.
