

DejaOffice CRM-syncs PC, iPhone and Android while Google Calendar is Down

CompanionLink offers PC and Phone based CRM solution without dependence on monthly billing or "big-data" cloud vendors

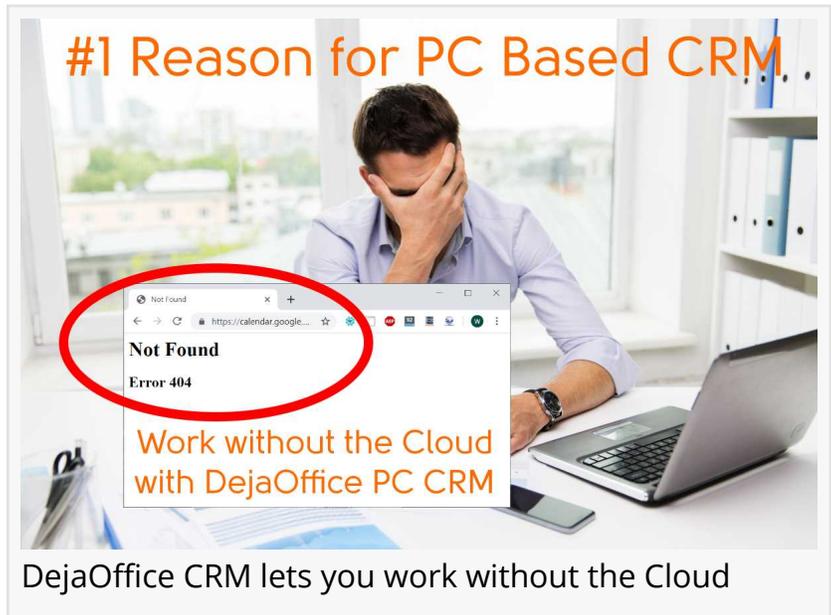

PORTLAND, OR, US, June 18, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Google has experienced an outage with Google Calendar services down during the business day. DejaOffice customers are up and running because DejaOffice synchronizes PC based products like Outlook, Act!, Goldmine, and Palm Desktop directly from PC to DejaOffice on your phone, bypassing Google, Microsoft and Apple services.

"Google free services are paid by advertisers based on your data and usage" says Wayland Bruns, CTO for CompanionLink Software, Inc. With today's outage, even businesses who pay for Google Services, and are Ad free, are unable to schedule, sync or coordinate their teams. Their business is down. DejaOffice is PC based, and not dependent on "big data" services. Our products store your data directly on your PC and phone, so even when you are not connected you can add, schedule, and make notes in your CRM. When your phone reconnects, the sync will catch up with the updates that you have made offline."
