The food & beverage industry is booming owing to multiple factors. The industry is expected to exhibit a steeper rise in the growth curve over the next few years. Industry leaders are quick to respond to shifts in consumer preferences which is anticipated to fuel demand for food products and beverages in the years to come. In addition, the rising middle-income population is further projected to favor the expansion of the industry in the upcoming years. With the rise in income levels, the consumption levels are also prognosticated to witness an upsurge. Thus, the demand is expected to increase substantially over the next couple of years.

The exponentially increasing working population has fueled the demand for convenience food. The growth pattern of the industry is expected to benefit from the rising demand for convenience food. Industry leaders are focusing on product innovation and product portfolio development for capitalizing on the growing need. Participants of the industry have not only responded to demand but also created demands by introducing new products. Flavor innovation is one of the key strategies executed by the industry leaders for gaining an edge over competitors. In addition, an influx of new entrants is also expected in the upcoming years. This, in turn, is poised to catapult the industry on a growth trajectory in the nearby future.

With approximately 94% of people across the globe, recognizing Coca Cola's red and white logo, the consumer goods industry has attained remarkable peaks on the growth graph in the past few decades. The consumer revolution, marked by the 17th century, marked the egress of the traditional lifestyle of scarcity and was one that saw flourishing and mass consumption of goods by society. Owing to relatively lower costs of production, and hence, lower prices, the consumer-packaged goods industry surged wildly.
