

Commander of the New Joint 7th Air Defence Group to Present at Air Missile Defence Technology 2019

Smi Reports: 7th Air Defence Group will present a keynote address at the 4th annual Air Missile Defence Technology conference this October

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, July 9, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- It was announced that the command of the United Kingdom's ground-based air defence systems has transferred from the Royal Air Force to the Army. Under the new Operational Command of the Army's Force Troops Command, Joint Ground Based Air Defence has been renamed 7th Air Defence Group.

The 7th Air Defence Group is equipped with the Rapier missile that has seen service in the Falkland Islands, the High-Velocity Missile and the LEAPP target identification system. It is soon to upgrade to the new state-of-the-art Sky Sabre anti-aircraft missile system which will start to be introduced later in the year.

Conference speaker Colonel Giles Malec, Commander of the newly formed 7th Air Defence Group has stated that:

"Although the command has passed to the Army the links to the Royal Air Force will continue. The Army is committed to growing the air defence capability over the coming years. There is a ten-year programme ahead to update our equipment with new missiles and radar systems; it will make our capability far more potent."

Attendees for the upcoming Air Missile Defence Technology conference, taking place on 22nd-23rd October in Prague, will have the opportunity to learn more about the 7th Air Defence Group's ten-year capability upgrade program from Colonel Giles Malec through his keynote address on:

"Enhancing the 7th Air Defence Group with Superior Air Defence Technology"

- Threat analysis for the British Armed Forces: Current capabilities and focus areas
- Working with international partners to develop systems interoperability at Thorney Island training facility
