Since the mass production of automobiles, the global culture is highly influenced by the adoption of cars as a necessity. With more than 12 million people working in automotive-related jobs in Europe alone, it is safe to say that the automotive industry is placing food on the tables of more than a billion people. Although the industry has been consistently witnessing accelerated growth, it has also witnessed a fair share of transformation through the decades.

Following the recent economic crisis in the US, the automotive industry is expected to witness steady growth, as compared to the past five years. Profits and sales in the industry seem to recover, as consumers have started spending on the latest models. Moreover, China is noted to be a significant growth pocket for automobiles in the forthcoming years. Profits in the global industry are expected to gain traction in the future. New expansion opportunities fueling such profit growth are likely to emerge primarily in developing economies and then, at a lower scale, in developed economies such as Europe, US, Japan, and South Korea.
