

How tourist survived life-threatening illness on safari in Namibia

LEBANON, NH, USA, July 17, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Scott Garrett no longer leaves the country without his Global Rescue (<https://www.globalrescue.com/>) membership card in his wallet. Garrett's incredible story about a life-threatening illness on safari in Namibia is a testament to why his family considers themselves lucky to have Global Rescue.

Garrett is the president of Garrett Trucking in Houston, Texas. A busy man, Garrett found time to take an adventurous vacation with his wife. Their trip took them from Houston to Dubai, Johannesburg and then Namibia.

Two days into the vacation, Garrett inhaled a mysterious airborne bacteria. His breathing became labored, he was coughing frequently and began to experience major fatigue while on safari with his wife.

Garrett remembers telling his wife, "This isn't that big of a deal. I'll be fine." It wouldn't be long until he realized just how wrong he was.

While Garrett was quick to dismiss the situation, his wife Tanya would not, as Scott's symptoms were growing serious. His kidneys were failing and some of his other organs had begun shutting down.

I had an understanding partner to help me get through it. I wasn't alone. I wasn't just going to be lost in that mess.”

Tanya Garrett

Fortunately, Scott and Tanya reached a hospital in time to address the bacterial infection Scott had contracted. Distance from home combined with a life-threatening illness can result in a horrifying feeling. This was the feeling that Tanya described prior to contacting Global Rescue.

“When Global Rescue was there with me,” Tanya recalls, “I had an understanding partner to help me get through it. I wasn't alone. I wasn't just going to be lost in that mess. I wasn't scared anymore.”

Thanks to Tanya's quick decision-making and the Garrett's Global Rescue membership, they were able to access appropriate care for Scott's rapidly deteriorating condition. Global Rescue directed Garrett to the best nearby facility to address his life-threatening medical issues and deployed personnel to assist Tanya in overseeing her husband's care.
