Interestingly, Lollypop would be the second design studio, where Ash Bhardwaj, founding CEO of Aricent and Board Member of Terralogic has shown interest. Back in 2006, Frog Design was acquired by Aricent and is considered among the most renowned design studios today.

“Technology is amazing and it changes the way we work or perceive the world, but it's only with Design that we can truly make technology accessible and usable. I am really

“We have had continuous requests from our clients and consulates across the globe to open centers in their countries, however, we found it hard to have a global expansion without bigger support and expertise. Hence, collaborating with Terralogic is an amazing opportunity for us, not only do we get to expand globally but we also retain our culture, identity, and operations as a separate entity. It gives us all the freedom to pursue our vision of Humanizing Technology,” said Anil Reddy, Founder & Design Director, Lollypop Design Studio.

While addressing the gathering Anil also shared "I am a big fan of the journey of Frog Design as it has added immense value in the business ecosystem. And what better way to further Lollypop's journey than by leveraging the expertise of the very same funding team. I am very excited about this partnership."
