LONDON, GREATER LONDON, UK, July 22, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The death care services market expected to reach a value of nearly $184.46 billion by 2022, significantly growing at a CAGR of 11.6% during the forecast period. The growth in the death care services market is due to the digital revolution and leading vendors investing in premium products and services to serve the boutique consumers.

However, the market for death care services is expected to face certain restraints from several factors such as the entrance of e-commerce giants such as Walmart and Amazon offering burial and memorial products at low prices.

The death care services market consists of the sales of death care services and related goods by entities (organizations, sole traders and partnerships) that prepare the dead for burial or interment, conduct funerals, operate sites or structures reserved for the interment of human or animals remains, and/or cremate the dead.

Trends In The Death Care Services Market

Crematories are offering green funeral and burial services in the cemetery industry to environmentally conscious customers. A green funeral offers environmentally-friendly options such as funeral in a natural setting, use of only recycled paper products, locally-grown organic flowers and food, biodegradable clothing, shroud or casket and use of formaldehyde-free products. In natural burial, the body is buried in a natural setting without embalming, and instead of traditional standing headstones, plants, trees or flat rocks are used as grave markers. These crematories also use alkaline hydrolysis process, which uses 90% less energy than flame cremation. Charles F. Snyder Funeral Home & Crematory is one such green funeral service provider in Pennsylvania.
