Financial Services (FS) broadly refer to investment management and portfolio management services that control the capital usages of an individual or organization. Financial services companies provide services such as budgeting, savings, and catalyze investment decisions for large funds, such as mutual funds or pension plans. There is a wide range of resources and applications available for consumers that allow them to manage almost every aspect of their business and finances on their own.

However, as the net worth of a company or individual increases, they often seek the help of companies providing business & financial services. Financial advisors associated with private banking and brokerage services can also offer assistance in holistic money management plans that can involve estate planning, retirement, and more. Companies operating in the business and financial services strive to grow and increase their shareholder values, dealing with the risk related to the market and regulatory pressures.

On the other hand, customers' demands, requirements, and expectations continuously change, which, as a result, changes paradigms of maturation of population, desire to increase the personal and organizational wealth, and personalization of these BS&FS products and services. This leads to intensifying the competition in the market and squeezing market margins that force the market players to cut costs and enhance the quality of services.
