Global oil demand is undergoing a structural shift. OECD oil demand decreased by 3 million barrels per day (mb/d) from 2000-2015, while demand in non-OECD countries grew by 21 mb/d. This change is majorly attributed by two reasons – first high growth of the Chinese oil industry from 2000 to 2013, and second rapid growth in India's oil demand. The growth of gasoline demand is high in Asian emerging countries due to continuous industrialization, rising per capita incomes, and increasing use of gasoline in the transport industry. The transport sector holds significant share approximately 63% of global oil demand, and fastest growing among all other sectors. Growing transport industry in non-OECD countries is one of the major drivers of the gasoline fuel additives market.
