Rising incidences of hospital acquired infections is driving the sterilization equipment and disinfectants market. Hospital-acquired infections (HAI) are infections caused by viral, bacterial, and fungal pathogens present on contaminated equipment, air droplets or bed linens in healthcare facilities. The most common types of HAI include bloodstream infection, ventilator-associated pneumonia, urinary tract infection and surgical site infection. Sterilization equipment and disinfectants ensure protection against these hospital acquired infections.

The growing preference for disposable medical supplies due to high prices and maintenance costs of reusable instruments is acting as a restraint on the sterilization equipment and disinfectants market. Disposable medical supplies include suction catheters, facemasks, needles, gloves, syringes, applicators and others. Disposable medical supplies are sterile and are used only once, thus eliminating the need of sterilization equipment and disinfectants.
