

"New Earth," A Song for the Future by Kate Magdalena

San Francisco Artist Kate Magdalena Sings A Possible Future

SAN FRANCISCO , CALIFORNIA, UNITED STATES, August 22, 2019

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Into the dark pond of looming environmental challenges, Kate Magdalena offers her latest song "New Earth." Like the calm at the center of a storm, the song and accompanying artwork by California visionary painter Suzanne De Veuve, posit an earth healed and whole, a living planet in a universe created by a loving intelligence. Beyond the human ravages upon nature, the earth continues to pour its abundant life upon humankind, and if given the chance, can heal. Beyond the human manipulation of the earth's natural systems, beyond the threat of nuclear disaster, beyond the destruction of the earth's forests and oceans, beyond the wars, Kate puts forward the picture of the earth healed. If the collective imagination has power, as Carl Jung expressed, then holding a picture of the earth healed and whole may serve as a constructive inspiration, offering possibilities that the opposing view does not. The song also echoes the words powerfully expressed in the Bible, "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former things will not be remembered, nor come to mind." Isaiah 65:17

If the collective imagination has power, holding the image of the earth healed and whole may serve us.”

And I saw a new heaven, and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away.

"New Earth" is the most recent release from Kate's upcoming album "A Larger Dance," coming this October. The recordings have been produced by GRAMMY-nominated producer Billy Smiley (Johnny Cash, Whiteheart, Clay Aiken, and the Newsboys) and feature some of Nashville's finest musicians with Fred Eltringham (The Wallflowers and Sheryl Crow), Byron House (Robert Plant and the Band of Joy), Blair Masters (Garth Brooks) and
