A nebulizer changes medication from a liquid to a mist so that it can be more easily inhaled into the lungs. Nebulizers are particularly effective in delivering asthma medications to infants and small children and to anyone who has difficulty using an asthma inhaler. Smoking, rising environmental pollution and the various types of allergies associated with it, will increase the respiratory disorders such as asthma and other lung diseases in coming years. The prevalence of respiratory diseases is more in aged population rather than youngsters which are creating robust development in global nebuliser market. However, the risk of infection associated with the long-term use of a nebuliser and its less portability are hampering the growth of global nebuliser market.
