2018 was a year of steady growth for the global chemical sector. The market indicators remain positive for 2019 as well. As projected, emerging markets will continue to make significant contribution in terms of revenue. Market players are focusing on disruptive changes taking place and aligning themselves accordingly. Technology is playing an important role in bringing changes in the industry. In addition, the integration of new-age analytical solutions has translated into greater efficiency. Such factors are opening new windows of opportunities for market players.

The chemical industry has greatly benefited from industrial growth and rapid urbanization in Asia, the Middle East and Latin America. Demand for manufacturing chemicals has continued to grow in these countries. In advanced countries growth has been relatively slower in recent years. In the U.S., increased focus on boosting domestic manufacturing is expected to provide tailwinds to the market in the forthcoming years. In Europe, growth demand is expected to grow at a steady pace. However, European suppliers must remain alert to changes brought about by Brexit.
