The global economy has entered a new infrastructure spending cycle, which has had a significant impact on the construction industry. The emerging economies across the globe, especially in the APAC and the Middle East & Africa are outlaying massive investments in infrastructural development. Moreover, with urban migration, construction spending for the residential segment has witnessed a steep surge. Expansion of spending capacities in the developing economies has opened up new avenues for the construction industry. Furthermore, spiraling rise in renovation and refurbishment of old residential properties have added fuel to the construction industry. Some notable trends in the construction industry include green building materials, pre-engineered buildings, dry construction, 3D concrete printing, digitally printed articles, and others.
