The healthcare industry has started taking a different turn with its gradual stepping into the twenty-first century. The last few decades marked quite a few leaps in terms of innovation, but this phase saw a generous amount of blending of technology with the main structure of the industry. This structure includes both the treatment process and functional strategies as its integral ingredients. Facilitating various operational moves across the industry is the aim of this man and machine combo. It has simplified diagnostic methods, treatment procedures, efficient service, patient comfort, billing, recording of report, easy round-the-clock health service, and many other methods. The advent of technology has opened a gate for AI, bot, IoT, nanotechnology, and others to barge in. Resultantly, the ingress has turned pervasive making services in the industry more precise, reliable, and less time-consuming.
