The venture was started by Derek Shields of the Partners for Youth with Disabilities and the National Disability Mentoring Coalition as well as Steve Slowinski, the acting career readiness program director and national inclusion manager at the Partners for Youth with Disabilities. Their goal is to build a more inclusive community for youth, young adults and adults with disabilities through workshops and education.

Training for participants in the Boston Inclusion Community include self-paced online courses, webinars and in-person workshops. Online and webinar topics include “Introduction to Disability & Inclusion,” “Tips for Inclusive Communication,” “Developing an Inclusion Statement,” “Understanding Disability Disclosure,” “Frameworks and Assessment Tools for Disability Inclusion,” and “How to Identify & Support People at Risk for Suicide.”

The webinars and self-paced classes deliver the information necessary from industry experts to attain a greater understanding of disability topics and terminology. “We are looking forward to sharing and incorporating this information within our day-to-day work activities,” he said.

To cultivate the subject matter and incorporate the information within the workplace, the Boston Inclusion Community developed in-person hands-on workshops with the goal to create
