The consumer goods industry includes a group of companies that are concerned with the business of producing items purchased by individuals and are not designed for consumption by manufacturers and industries. The consumer goods businesses are engaged in food manufacture, clothing, beverages, packaged goods, automobiles, and electronics to name a few. The development of the consumer goods industry gained momentum during the second industrial revolution which began in the mid-19th century; when the goods being manufactured on large scale machines were being used to make goods, chiefly aimed at households and individuals. Steadily, the consumer goods industry became a well-established industry originally in the developed world before long establishing its presence in all the regions of the world.
