Global spending on hardware, software, telecom as well as services is expected to decline, owing to rising ICT spending from consumers on selective platforms. The traditional tech spending is expected to be driven primarily by four platforms viz mobile, social, cloud, and big data/ analytics over the next few years. On the other hand, since these platforms are cost-effective, it is likely to result in a higher adoption rate of advanced technologies integrated with artificial intelligence (AI), robotics, and artificial and virtual reality (AR/VR). Growth in the traditional ICT industry is expected to be driven mainly by mobile and cloud. Even though some categories are expected to decline gradually, businesses are still probable to use traditional technologies as significant components in their digital strategies and planning.
