

Top Four Reasons to Attend SMI's 3rd Annual Maritime Information Warfare Conference

SMI reports: Only a few days left to take advantage of the last early bird for the Maritime Information Warfare Conference, in London this November

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, September 26, 2019 / EINPresswire.com/ -- Ahead of the Maritime Information Warfare conference, taking place on the 18th-19th November 2019 in London, SMI Group caught up with a few speakers to find out more about their role, future outlook, current projects and their thoughts on the upcoming event.

Captain Alfred Turner from the US Naval War College who will be presenting on day-two, commented "...This conference is particularly unique to the field of information warfare because of its maritime theme. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to have focused conversations with military and civilian colleagues who similarly focus on the maritime aspects of information warfare..."

The final early bird discount of £100 is expiring at midnight on Monday 30th September 2019. Interested delegates must register soon to secure a place at <http://www.maritimeinfowarfare.com/einpr8>

SMi are delighted to share their top four reasons to attend this year's conference, including:

1. STRONG SUPPORT FROM THE ROYAL NAVY

Commodore Ian Annett, Assistant Chief of Staff Information Warfare and Chief Information Officer, Royal Navy will be presenting a keynote briefing on day-one of the event.

The agenda covers the key themes from the Royal Navy's Exercises Information Warrior 2018/19, including: Artificial Intelligence, Information Exploitation and Big Data, Cyber Security and Defence, Command Control Communication and Computers, and Intelligence Surveillance Reconnaissance.

2. INSIGHT INTO NATO MARITIME COMMAND'S NEW INFORMATION WARFARE DOCTRINE

The poster features a dark blue background with a grid of binary code (0s and 1s). In the foreground, a white naval ship is visible. The text 'MARITIME INFORMATION WARFARE' is written in large, bold, yellow, distressed font. Below this, the dates '18 - 19 November 2019' and location 'London, UK' are displayed in white.
