The financial services sector is booming in emerging and developed countries alike, as consumers have become more aware of various options to manage their wealth and are looking to get the best out of the various options available to them. The financial services sector has also been boosted by the addition of mobile and web operability, as consumers now find it easier to operate and engage financial service channels through smartphones and computers. Mobile integration of financial services is likely to remain a key trend in the global financial services sector in the coming years due to the added convenience it provides to consumers and the wider scope of consumer engagement it opens up for the financial service providers.

However, along with the growing demand for mobile and web-based dispensation of financial service applications, the need for security protocol to ensure safe transactions has also increased. In the 21st century, cybercrime is likely to be one of the biggest threats faced by a wide range of institutions worldwide, with online attackers making use of online portals to steal data, among other illicit activities. This is likely to be a key trend in the financial services sector in the coming years.
