"The Air Conditioner market was valued at 78772 US$ Million in 2017 with a CAGR of 9.54% in the forecast period by 2025".

In the coming years, the worldwide market for air conditioning is likely to expand considerably, owing to improved financial circumstances, increased per capita revenue, and increased rates of pollution. Technological advances in developing nations are also driving the global market for air conditioning. The increasing air pollution level harms not only the environment but individuals residing in that specific setting as well. Pollution leads to fatigue and headaches, prevalent symptoms of bad air quality. This propels the worldwide market for air conditioning systems further.

Region wise market analysis

Due to the early implementation of air conditioning technology and the adoption of a healthy lifestyle, North America is anticipated to retain a significant share of the worldwide market for air conditioning in the future. On the other hand, the Asia Pacific is expected to show significant development over the forecast period. Due to increasing product use in developing markets such as China and India, the housing industry will retain a considerable percentage share of the region's air conditioning market. A fragile financial condition characterizes the European market for air conditioning. The increasing demand for AC substitute can create profitable possibilities for businesses operating in this regional market. Manufacturers focused on creating energy-efficient air conditioners to meet the European market's requirements.
