PUNE , MAHARASHTRA , INDIA , October 14, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Balers are agricultural implements that are used to compress a raked crop that has been harvested into compact bales which makes it easier to handle, store and transport. There are different types of round balers used with each type producing a different type of baler that differs either in shape or material used to bind the bales. The two different shapes of bales can be either rectangular or cylindrical with the material used to bind the bales being wire, twine or some sort of strapping.

The most common type of baler used in the world today is probably the round baler. It uses a combination of rubberized belts and/or fixed rollers which rolls up the grass inside the baler. After the bale has reached a preset size, a binding material is wrapped around the bales and it is ejected from the back of the baler. The weight of the bales can vary depending on the size, material and moisture content of the crop that is being baled.
