Overview:

Table tennis, or as popularly known ping-pong, can be defined as a sport where two or four players play with a lightweight ball hitting it back and forth, across a table, where the medium to hit it is small wooden racket often with a padding on the flat surface of it. The table has a net in the middle and is played on the basis of specific set of rules. The game requires quick reaction as it goes on pretty quickly. The global market for table tennis is showing immense possibilities in the coming years due to its high integration in various countries.

The game can be played in different forms like men's doubles, women's singles, men's singles, and women's doubles. The game has undergone several modification and is also a part of the Olympic games, which has ensured better market percolation. The game is quite inexpensive as it does not require much equipment. However, to maintain fitness, players have to exercise a lot. These factors are making it easier for the global market for table tennis to find prospect in diverse areas.

Various countries are showing substantial interest in taking the market for table tennis on a global scale. Both private and government bodies are showing interest in taking the market ahead. However, in under-developed countries the growth may be restrained due to the lack of infrastructure and budget to bolster the growth of the market. But the sports is inexpensive, which can ensure better number of takers if marketed well. This can bring back the market on track in the coming years.
