PUNE, MAHARASTRA, INDIA, October 17, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Market Segmentation

The Global Market of Bikini can be segmented depending upon their types of material,

Nylon – The Nylon belongs to the family of the synthetic polymers that are generically designed. The Nylon is based on the aliphatic polyamides or the semi-aromatic polyamides. The Nylon is a thermoplastic and silky material and can also be melted and processed into fibers, films, or shapes.

Spandex – The Spandex is a material of fabric used for making stretchable clothing that includes sportswear. The Spandex is light in weight and is a byproduct of the synthetic fiber. The Spandex is designed from the long chain of a polymer called polyurethane. The polyurethane is manufactured by the reaction of the polyester with the diisocyanate. Apart from the production of Bikini, the Spandex is also used for the manufacture of T-shirts, Leggings, Yoga wear, Tank tops, Active-wear and etc.

The Bikini is a typical swimsuit for women. The Bikini features two triangles that are made up of fabric on top that resembles much like a bra. This upper part helps in covering the women's breasts and two fabric triangles on the bottom to cover the pelvis in the front and the buttocks in the back. The size of the top and bottom of the Bikini varies from fabric that covers the full pelvis, buttock, and breast to the more revealing and exposing designs like the G-string or the thongs, which are designed for the purpose of covering the areolae and the Mons pubis which results in the complete exposure of the buttocks.
