Market Overview

There's a reason why Gellan Gums are trending among people of different age groups, especially children. This gum is a type of chewing gum that is made from the extra cellular polysaccharides. This extra cellular polysaccharide is extracted or removed from the microorganisms of different varieties, particularly bacteria. But the best of the extra cellular polysaccharide's element is extracted from the cell-matrix of pseudomonad elodea, which is also a type of bacteria found in marshy areas. This type of bacteria is composed of a linear structure that has a repeating component or units of tetra saccharides. One of the reasons why this variant of gum is getting more popular than other varieties of gums is the different properties it has. It can act as a gelling agent, thickener, and also as a lubricant. Thus, the gellan gum is not only used in the manufacturing of chewing gums.

Some of the other popular properties of this variant of gum are its property as a stabilizer. It also acts as an emulsifier and a suspension agent as well. The gellan gum because of the presence of extra cellular polysaccharides can function as a film former, culture medium, and in many similar actions. This is the reason why they find their use in so many popular industrial uses. They are used at large in commercial sectors and industries like the food additives industry, pharmaceutical industry, and the daily-chemical industry as well.
