Description

As per Wise Guy Report, Mead is an alcoholic drink produced by fermenting honey with water, sometimes with different fruits, spices, grains, or hops. The alcohol content ranges from around 8% to over 20%. Mead's defining feature is that most of the fermentable sugar in the beverage is derived from honey. It may still be carbonated, or naturally sparkling; dry, semi-sweet, or sweet. According to the study, countless untapped markets are present as a main growth driver.

The Mead industry has also had some impact, but has maintained a relatively optimistic growth over the past four years. Increasing online sales is one of the key trends that will contribute to market growth in the years ahead. Increased worldwide internet penetration and busy consumer lifestyles have led in enhanced online sales of alcoholic beverages such as mead drinks.

The mead beverage industry appears to be fragmented, characterized by the existence of several players. This mead beverage industry study provides data on the competitive setting among players in this marketplace and provides an assessment of important businesses and their products such as traditional mead.
