

Top key reasons to attend SMI's 3rd Annual Maritime Information Warfare Conference in 3 weeks

SMI reports: With just three weeks to go, SMI group share the highlights for this year's conference in London.

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, October 28, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In recent news, Vice Admiral Brian Brown, the Commander of Naval Information Forces (NAVIFOR) expects increasing fleet integration as Information Warfare (IW) becomes more broadly recognised as an integral part of Navy warfighting.

He stated "Our IW 'culture' is emerging across all IW specialties; it will continue to mature in the upcoming decade. In 10 years...our collective IW capabilities to assure command and control, provide predictive battlespace awareness, and deliver integrated IW fires will be integral to all plans and operations..."

Achieving operational effectiveness and "Information Advantage" is now imperative to the success of any navy – delegates will have the opportunity to join this crucial discussion in three weeks' time at the Maritime Information Warfare Conference. The two-day event will discuss the strategies, systems, and new technologies to increase information warfare capabilities while also exploring the challenges associated with information warfare.
