

Curacubby Offers Its “Reach Out” Messaging Service for FREE to Schools in California to Help with Impact of Wildfires

Curacubby's “Reach Out” communications service is free to education and childcare centers in California during one of its worst fire seasons ever.

BERKELEY, CA, U.S., October 29, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Curacubby, a leading provider of simplified student enrollment, automated billing and easy online payment solutions, today announced that it is making its “Reach Out” text and email communications service available for free to schools and childcare centers throughout California, as the state begins to grapple with what is predicted to be one of its worst fire seasons ever.

In addition to dealing with the danger of extensive wildfires, consumers and businesses in regions throughout California are also facing multi-day power outages as the utilities companies are shutting off electricity in areas where risk of a downed powerline could start a fire. Schools in particular are affected, as they are forced to close school when there is no electricity, and often have no idea how long the outage will take place. Curacubby’s Reach Out service can be a useful way for school administrators to quickly send out alerts to parents and the community about school closures or other emergency notifications.

“We have customers throughout the state who are being impacted by the current fires and we want to help them and other schools as best we can,” said Steven Khuong, Co-founder and CEO of Curacubby. “Evacuations and power outages create enough challenges for administrators as it is, and getting timely communications out to parents can be an added worry. Curacubby is a caring member of the communities we serve and we want to do whatever we can to help schools and childcare businesses get important information out as quickly as possible.”

Any school, daycare, after school or other child education-related business that is interested in using Curacubby’s free Reach Out service can go to <https://www.curacubby.com/california-fires>.
